Professionalism In Family Child Care

Do people still call you a babysitter? You may ask yourself the questions; "What does being professional mean to me as a family child care provider?" or "What are the attributes of a person who chooses this business?" We will explore the components of how we act and what we offer to promote ourselves as early childhood professionals and not babysitters. You will form your own personal list of important values in being a professional provider.

With Boys and Girls in Mind: Talking About the Differences in Development and Learning

Since the 1990's we have known so much more about brain development and how this is affected by gender. We now have more biological and neurological information about how children actually learn – and learn best – than ever before. Join us for a look at the most recent information about the differences. We will also be looking at identifying our strengths as “teachers” of young children, strategies to use and successful elements of learning environments.
